MESSAGES FROM THE GOVERNOR

Governor's Office, State Capitol

January 10, 2020

To the Members of the Senate and the Assembly of the California Legislature:

It's often said that budgets are statements of values. In America's most populous and productive state, our state Budget is more than that. It is a blueprint for a better quality of life and brighter future for millions of individuals striving and succeeding together—in pursuit of their own version of the California Dream.

Thanks to your leadership and support, we saved more than ever for a rainy day and paid off the state's budgetary wall of debt, while achieving our highest credit ratings in nearly two decades. We moved closer toward universal health care coverage, and we took on Big Pharma and rising prescription drug costs. California enacted the strongest renter protection package in the nation, provided a $1,000 tax rebate to low-income families with young children to relieve the economic stress of working families and address childhood poverty, and made two years of community college tuition-free. California made the largest investment ever in K–12 schools and met the unprecedented challenge presented by wildfires with $1 billion in disaster preparedness, response, and recovery.

California is stronger than ever today, and the Budget found in the pages ahead reflects our fortitude. Our state has provided the rocket fuel for the nation's economic expansion. We are the world's capital of innovation. We have more people with access to health care and higher education than any other state. California is showing the nation and the world what big-hearted, effective governance looks like.

In spite of this progress, there are deep, structural challenges that threaten our state's future and demand our urgent attention. These problems—catastrophic wildfires and their impacts, the expanding homelessness crisis, and growing inequality of opportunity—have been decades in the making and won't be fixed overnight. California can and must do more to tackle these challenges and fortify our future.

Our heroic emergency personnel and firefighters put out more than 7,800 fires last year—thanks in many cases to prepositioned assets and the newest weather technology. But wildfires fueled by climate change continue to threaten our people and our way of life. The Budget builds on this record investment by expanding firefighting technology and personnel.

Last year, California dedicated a record amount of emergency funding for cities and counties to fight homelessness and empowered cities and counties to quickly build more shelters and navigation centers, and to provide services. But addressing this issue takes much more than funding—it will take an all-of-the-above approach from state and local leaders, one that includes innovative mental health and substance use disorder treatment, and more shelters to help get people off the streets and into housing.

For too long, our state's prosperity has not been broadly shared. In 2019, California took bold action to expand access to opportunity and tackle the affordability crisis families are facing. We've sought to make it easier for every California family to afford to live and thrive in America's most beautiful state. This Budget doubles down on the war on unaffordability—from taking on health care costs and having the state produce our own generic drugs to expanding the use of state properties to build housing quickly.

Our state's best days are ahead of us. Through smart investments and tackling the most intractable problems, California can continue to lead the nation in growth and opportunity.

I look forward to our work together in the year ahead as we enact a budget that continues to move us closer to a California for All.

With respect,

GAVIN NEWSOM, Governor

Receipt

I acknowledge receipt this 10th day of January, 2020 at 10:08 a.m., of the budget for the 2020–21 fiscal year, together with an explanatory message delivered to me personally by Samuel Miller.

BERNADETTE MCNULTY
